The following are tivals, interspersed with the daily and hourly telegrams of the irrepressed conflict between the parties and leaders at Washington, have, until yesterday, kept up such an excitement, that we do not suppose any number of the readers of the public journals would have been in a mood to even read an account of the achievements or the applause awarded an artist, whatever were his merits. But now, since this rougher excitement on the more boisterous field is all over, we are sure that all who justly value this most admirable of the glories of their country, will be ready to sit down and read all that has been spoken and written of and concerning such a contributor to our national glory. The artist, man of science and literature, as well as the statesman and warrior, contribute by their achievments an individual fame to the glory of the State and nation; and we feel that just at this hour there is a perceptibly strong disposition to estimate justly whatever has elevated, or promises to exalt still higher, our beloved Republic. We are sure that every reader of genuine taste will be as much interested and delighted in what concerns the citizen of this class, as in what relates to the more glaring idols of the applauding multitudes.

Judge Thos. B. Monroe, of Frankfort, acted, on the occasion, as President.

We cannot close this notice without a word about the excellence of the entertainment prepared by Mr. Scrogin, the worthy proprietor of the Broadway. The feast was in keeping with the long night of poverty and obscurity, caring nothing for ease, luxury, social rank, wealth, or power; but with a steady and sublime purpose as in the Broadway. formed about ten minutes ago that I must invent and announce it. Something was said to me about a welcome; but that notion was at once disposed of, and I have stated how I immediate-ly recognized that the sentiment must be about withhold my humble voice when thus called an occasion like this; but I am unwilling to ly recognized that the sentiment must be about ly recognized that the sentiment must be about sculpture, and something both novel and new. We are in this age so much wiser, more inventive and witty than all our ancestors that I knew no motion that had ever been used before, would be willingly adopted, I had therefore to inventall, out and out. The topic, moreover, seemed to be one whereof I knew nothing, absolutely, and I might have despaired, but in running up my predicaments and topics I fell upon the categery of relation, and I immediately determined to select and fix upon something which I did understand, and which would be a fit object for a middle term, and that I would thereupon ascertain the relation of sculpture to it, and thereby middle term, and that I would thereupon ascertiain the relation of sculpture to it, and thereby take a step I soon made my selection. It was of course the law; it could have been nothing else. It was what I had made all my other studies the state of th ies tributary to, for forty years, and in which was there still stands near the town of Winchester the stand point where I had taken all my obser- a stone chimney erected by his own hand. After the stand point where I rad taken all my observations and fixed for myself all the relations of every other object. But what was the relation here required, and how was it to be found? It was of course discovered by running up the genera, or some of them, to which sculpture belongs and thereby finding properties common to it and and thereby finding properties common to it and the applause of all, upon the completion of the tolars. And I would have set off in this discovered by the completion of the stand of the applause of all, upon the completion of the stand of the applause of all, upon the completion of the stand of the applause of all, upon the completion of the stand of the applause of all, upon the completion of the stand of the applause of all, upon the completion of the applause of all appears. to law. And I would have set off in this direction. But it occurred to me to form upon the art of sculpture a class of the fine and beautiful arts the name of the great statesman whose majestic appropriate to law. science and art of jurisprudence, and which would at once ennoble and dignify the entire association. I proceeded accordingly. Next to sculpat once ennoble and dignify the entire association. I proceeded accordingly. Next to sculpture was of course set down painting; it followed that poetry had to be added to these; and then it was obvious that to complete the group and make up a class of things fit for the occasion, music with all its comprehensive harmony had to be embraced, and it was added.

The question then recurred, what is the relation between this class of acts and the law that the statue of Henry Clay—appropriate in the first term to the first of the group and the law that the statue of Henry Clay—appropriate of the humble beginning, and the tion between this class of arts and the law, that great and pervading science of all art? What is splendid consummation of his fame. This career common to them all, or any of them? What is beautifully illustrates, what is the glory of our their unity? In what does it consist, and what are the effects thereof on each constituent species ity, there is no royal road to fame, either of the classes? * * * * The first rough work was soon accomplished; the sentment to be in this land of ours, I thank God genius and talproposed was settled; but its form was not determined, nor is it yet perfected, and still less has been done in framing an expression of it in and fame, and all else that is worth having, are accessible to all classes, and merit is the only passently; after I have said a few words about its general characteristics. I supposed that I detected in the law and this class of these high and difficulties that seemed impassable and over obsentiful arts the presence, in some sense, of stacles that seemed insurmountable, solitary and beautiful arts the presence, in some sense, of what was at once the True, the Beautiful, and the Good; and that the combination or association of all was necessary to make the most perfect and highest object of the highest admiration of the human mind.

Indicates that seemed insurance and over obstacles that seemed insuran I cannot retree the process which brought me to this conclusion, nor will I offer any argument to support it. I will not even guarantee that it will bear discussion. It may be found all fanciful, or a new production of another species of the old stock of learned and profound nonsense, well sounding to the ear and looking well upon paper.

It had been supposed that the thirst for posthumous and immortal fame was this great motive power, and that it was or might be independent of any other emotion of the artist; but it is not that it was or might be independent of any other emotion of the artist; but it is not that it was or might be independent of any other emotion of the artist; but it is not that when Mr. Hart and myself lived there we were hardly up to the common standard of men, and not known at all above our follows: but after That is but the product of the ardent and all-and not known at all above our fellows; but after we left there and came here umong you, behold what great men we have become. This proves if my friends will allow me to say so, that there are greater men there where we come from than there are here where we have come to. You have already heard Gen. Houston in his peculiar way give abundant proof of the fact, but if you are not yet satisfied, call for my friend Downey, that Clarke county is not only the land of artists and lawyers, but of orators, too, of the first order Churches, Hotels, Public Halls, and Private Residences throughout the State can now be fixed up with these elegant and convenient chandeliers, and other beautiful gas fixtures, which add so much to the appearance of such piaces and to the comfort of the home circle, and which heretofore could be used only in those favored districts embraced within the coalgas limits of large cities.

The limited space of an advertisement precludes the insertion here of the numerous testimonials of approval we have received from all quarters. Suffice it to say, scientific men and others who have examined and thoroughly tested the merits of the Vesper Gas Light, pronounce it the best and cheapest artificial light now known.
